her a granddaughter, Miss Elaine Marston, a most levely girl of 16 summers. Adjoining their home was the plantation of Judge INENT. CARLIN & SONS. Miller, the wealthy father of bandsome young Harry, the devoted sweetheart of the beautiful Elaine. Harry was two years her senior, and when the order for all of Georgia's sons between the ages of eighteen and fifty years to go to the front came, he at once began preparation with all the ardor and enthusiasm of the Southern youth of that time. His last parting was with his "little sweetheart," as he fondly called her, PERRY, SMOOT & CO.

and his promises to return and made her his bride were sealed by many a pure kiss of love and tender embrace. For a while letters—letters full of tenderness, love and devotion—came, filling the heart of Elaine with joy and brighteet hopes of the future. Suddenly they ceased, and then comes one written by a friend telling of the capture of young Harry, the bravest of the brave, and of his incarceration in a Yankee prison.
Months of sorrow and anxiety follow, and then comes the sad news of his death brought by some "exchanges" from the prison in which he was confined. The grief of Elaine was terrible, but the young heart, however fondly it may love, however bit-terly it may suffer, seldom breaks, and in a few years the image of the handsome Harry was but a dim shadow, and the slendor, delicate girl had developed into a handsome, charming woman. She had many admirers, and on December 25, 1869, eight years after the departure of her boy lover, Dialne Marston stood at the altar to be-come the wife of one of Henry county's most come the wife of one of Henry county's most respected citizens. Recently a man in the disguise of an old tramp passed through Hampton and inquired for the home of Mrs —. He found the place, beheld the face of his once promised bride, bright and happy with the love of a devoted husband, bright and interesting children, and the many comforts of a beautiful country home, and returned here to take the cars for his home in the far West, not as a tramp, however, but as a handsome gentleman. however, but as a handsome gentleman, stout and hearty, and with only a few silver bairs upon his temples. He told us of his life in prison until the close of the war, the false report which reached him of the marriage of Elaine before his release, which nearly drove him mad; of his wonderful Country merchants are invited to call and ex-success in life in California, and last, of the report brought across the continent that Elaine did not marry till 1869, and was now a widow, the latter part of which he did not know to be false until he begged bread Real Estate Investment, Trust and Title (at her door. He says he will never visit Georgia again; that his people are dead, his heart's best love seered and withered, and nothing remains for him but to go forever from the scenes of his childhood and the land of his birth, to spend the remainder of his life as best he can, in honor ing the God who gave it. He has many old comrades in arms in this section who will, doubtless, recognize in Harry Miller one of the many brave boys sent out by our dear old country to fight for honor, our freedom, and our homes .- Hampton Times.

Sleeping in a Coffin. A man who will choose a coffin for a couch may justly lay claim for the badge of eccentricity. Frankford possesses such a man, and his coffin is kept in the loft over the undertaking establishment of E. H. Allen, on one of the principal streets of that suburb. The coffin is of extra large size and is only one of many similar furnishings which are stored in the undertaker's loft. The man who nightly sleeps in this strange bed is familiarly known to the people of the vicinity as Bob. He is a beneficiary upon the undertaker's charity, and has for years done odd jobs around the place for his board. He has occupied this coffin ever since he came to Mr. Allen's, except when his asth-ma has compelled him to sit up all night. Bob is a quaint little man of about 53 years with piercing black eves and curling years, with pieroing black eyes and curling black hair, now fast turning gray. He comes of one of Frankford's first families. His father was once the leading democratic politician of the town and an extensive builder. He built all the original buildings at Frankford Arsenal more than half a century ago. He gave all his children, Robert included, a liberal education and brought them up in luxury. The un-dertaker's shop is what was once the stable—altered now—of Robert's father, and part of the very loft in which he now makes bed was in his boyhood his pigeon house. A romance of love twines around the life of this odd little man, with his stooped shoulders and peculiar ways. His lady love died many years ago, and poor Bob often yet repeats, half audibly, some of the sonnets of which she was so fond. It is thought that Bob never fully recovered from the blow caused by her death, and the workshop of the undertaker has numerous acrostics and poems of Bob's composition stuck up around its walls. The man is a mathematician of some pretensions and a fine penman. Mr. Allen has known Bob from boshood and indulges his whim. A visitor to Mr. Allen's shop one night found that gentleman seated in his office. "Come

One of extra large size lay upon the floor, One of extra large size lay upon the floor, and from within it came deep, labored wheezing. The lid was well drawn up and nothing inside could be seen. "Hello, Bob, are you in?" said the indertaker, and the lid began to slide slowly downward with a creaking sound. A hend poked up and then a man sat upright. It was Bob. He answered: "Yes; what to you want?" and then, seeing a visitor, sank back and again drew the lid over him. "Bob's got it a little bad to night," said Mr. Alien, alluding to his asthma, and be pailed down the trap to his asthma, and he malled down the trap leading to the infrance left Bob to enjoy his sleep till morning.—Philadelphia Record.
